Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 23 to 29

Large animals that inhabit the desert have evolved a number of adaptations for reducing the effects of extreme heat. One adaptation is to be light in color, and to reflect rather than absorb the Sun's rays. Desert mammals also depart from the normal mammalian practice of maintaining a constant body temperature. Instead of trying to keep down the body temperature deep inside the body, which would involve the expenditure of water and energy, desert mammals allow their temperatures to rise to what would normally be fever height, and temperatures as high as 46 degrees Celsius have been measured in Grant's gazelles. The overheated body then cools down during the cold desert night, and indeed the temperature may fall unusually low by dawn, as low as 34 degrees Celsius in the camel. This is an advantage since the heat of the first few hours of daylight is absorbed in warming up the body, and an excessive buildup of heat does not begin until well into the day.

Another strategy of large desert animals is to tolerate the loss of body water to a point that would be fatal for non-adapted animals. The camel can lose up to 30 percent of its body weight as water without harm to itself, whereas human beings die after losing only 12 to 13 percent of their body weight. An equally important adaptation is the ability to replenish this water loss at one drink. Desert animals can drink prodigious volumes in a short time, and camels have been known to imbibe over 100 liters in a few minutes. A very dehydrated person, on the other hand, cannot drink enough water to rehydrate at one session, because the human stomach is not sufficiently big and because a too rapid dilution of the body fluids causes death from water intoxication. The tolerance of water loss is of obvious advantage in the desert, as animals do not have to remain near a water hole but can obtain food from grazing sparse and far-flung pastures. Desert-adapted mammals have the further ability to feed normally when extremely dehydrated, it is a common experience in people that appetite is lost even under conditions of moderate thirst.

Question 23: What is the main topic of the passage?

- A. Weather variations in the desert. B. Adaptations of desert animals.
C. Diseases of desert animals. D. Human use of desert animals.

Question 24: The word "maintaining" is closest in meaning to _____.

- A. measuring B. inheriting C. preserving D. delaying

Question 25: The author uses of Grant's gazelle as an example of

- A. an animal with a low average temperature
B. an animal that is not as well adapted as the camel
C. a desert animal that can withstand high body temperatures
D. a desert animal with a constant body temperature

Question 26: When is the internal temperature of a large desert mammal lower?

- A. Just before sunrise B. In the middle of the day C. Just after sunset D. Just after drinking

Question 27: The word "tolerate" is closest in meaning to _____.

- A. endure B. replace C. compensate D. reduce

Question 28: What causes water intoxication?

- A. Drinking too much water very quickly. B. Drinking polluted water.
C. Bacteria in water. D. Lack of water.

Question 29: Why does the author mention humans in the second paragraph?

- A. To show how they use camels. B. To contrast them to desert mammals.
C. To give instructions about desert survival. D. To show how they have adapted to desert life.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 30 to 37

Botany, the study of plants, occupies a peculiar position in the history of human knowledge. For many thousands of years it was the one field of awareness about which humans had the vaguest of insights. It is impossible to know today just what our Stone Age ancestors knew about plants, but from what we can observe of pre-industrial societies that still exist, a detailed learning of plants and their properties must be extremely ancient. This is logical. Plants are the basis of food pyramid for all living things, even for other plants. They have always been enormously important to the welfare of peoples, not only for food, but also for clothing, weapons, tools, dyes, medicines, shelter, and a great many other purposes. Tribes living today in the jungles of the Amazon recognize exactly hundreds of plants and know many properties of each. To them botany, as such, has no name and is probably not even recognized as a special branch of “knowledge” at all.

Unfortunately, the more industrialized we become the farther away we move from direct contact with plants, and the less distinct our knowledge of botany grows. Yet everyone comes unconsciously on an amazing amount of botanical knowledge, and few people will fail to recognize a rose, an apple, or an orchid. When our Neolithic ancestors, living in the Middle East about 10,000 years ago, discovered that certain grasses could be harvested and their seeds planted for richer yields the next season, the first great step in a new association of plants and human was taken. Grains were discovered and from them flowed the marvel of agriculture: cultivated crops. From then on, human would increasingly depend their living on the controlled production of a few plants, rather than getting a little here and a little there from many varieties that grew wild – and the accumulated knowledge of tens of thousands of years of experience and intimacy with plants in the wild would begin to fade away.

Question 30: What does the comment “This is logical” in paragraph 1 mean?

- A. It is reasonable to assume that our ancestors behaved very much like people in preindustrial societies.
- B. It is not surprising that early humans had a detailed knowledge of plants.
- C. There is no clear way to determine the extent of our ancestors’ knowledge of plants.
- D. Human knowledge of plants is well organized and very detailed.

Question 31: The phrase “properties of each” in paragraph 1 refers to each.....

- A. hundred
- B. plant
- C. purpose
- D. tribe

Question 32: According to the passage, why has general knowledge of botany declined?

- A. Botany is not recognized as a special branch of science.
- B. Research is unable to keep up with the increasing number of plants.
- C. Direct contact with a variety of plants has decreased.
- D. People no longer value plants as a useful resource.

Question 33: In paragraph 2, what is the author’s purpose in mentioning “a rose, an apple, or an orchid”?

- A. To cite examples of plants that are attractive.
- B. To illustrate the diversity of botanical life.
- C. To give botanical examples that most readers will recognize.
- D. To make the passage more poetic.

Question 34: According to the passage, what was the first great step toward the practice of agriculture?

- A. The development of a system of names for plants.
- B. The invention of agricultural implements and machinery.
- C. The changing diets of early humans.
- D. The discovery of grasses that could be harvested and replanted.

Question 35: The word “controlled” in paragraph 2 is closest in meaning to.....

- A. managed
- B. abundant
- C. advanced
- D. required

Question 36: The relationship between botany and agriculture is similar to the relations between zoology (the study of animal) and.....

- A. deer hunting
- B. sheep raising
- C. bird watching
- D. horseback riding

Question 37: Where in the passage does the author describe the benefits people derive from plants?

- A. Botany, the study of plants, occupies a peculiar position in the history of human knowledge.
- B. Tribes living today in the jungles of the Amazon recognize exactly hundreds of plants and know many properties of each.
- C. They have always been enormously important to the welfare of peoples, not only for food, but also for clothing, weapons, tools, dyes, medicines, shelter, and a great many other purposes.
- D. Yet everyone comes unconsciously on an amazing amount of botanical knowledge, and few people will fail to recognize a rose, an apple, or an orchid.
